

Peek at the Week

Illustrating Stories and Micro Duke

This week we have been reading Duffy's Lucky Escape by Ellie Jackson. Duffy is a young turtle who loves where she lives, near a coral reef. She gets caught up in a storm and ends up in unfamiliar waters, where she eats plastic waste, which she mistakes for food. After being rescued by fishermen, she has an operation and eventually ends up back in her beautiful surroundings. We had conversations about how to responsibly dispose of our rubbish, particularly over the holidays, when we might be visiting parks or beaches.

We thought it would be a lovely idea to think about the beautiful part of the sea that Duffy lives in and maybe illustrate it. So we invited in two special guests, Dean Gray and Angelika Scudamore. They illustrate books for a living. With their help we created some fabulous illustrations which you will see in this peek.

Look at our amazing illustrations. Which part of the sea did you enjoy drawing most? Was anything difficult to draw?

Duffy happily swam in the warm clear waters of her coral reef, searching for tasty jellyfish and shimmering shoals of fish to eat.

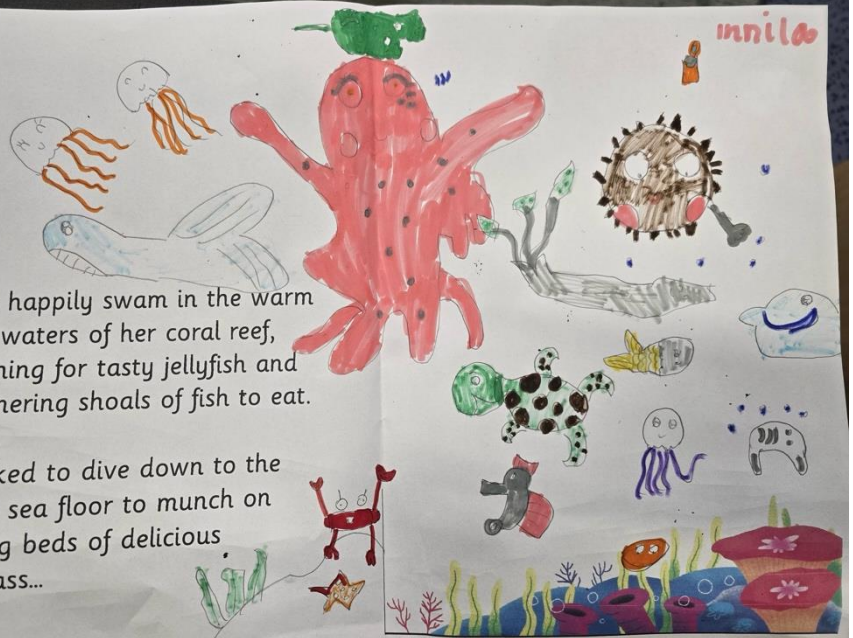

She liked to dive down to the sandy sea floor to munch on waving beds of delicious seagrass...
