Enquiry Question of the week

How are animals adapted to survive in their habitats in their local and wider environment?

Animals have special "outfits" or fur, feathers, or scales that keep them comfy in their homes. Polar bears have thick fur to stay warm in the snow, while fish have shiny scales to glide through the water. Animals have special ways to find and eat their favourite foods. Giraffes have long necks to reach tall leaves, and squirrels have bushy tails to balance while they hop around collecting nuts. Some have spots to blend in with trees, like leopards, while others, like chameleons, can change colours to match their surroundings. Penguins huddle together to stay warm in the icy wind, and elephants work together to protect their little ones.
